4 Governance models

INTERNAL

Experimentation with new innovation formats is most effective when done within one part of the organization. This allows you to do decentralized learning before scaling it up inside the full organization.

Lead: Internal Innovation Manager

INTEGRATED

Building capabilities is often an integrated effort that impacts the full organization. Sharing a common practice is most effective when done in the central organization.

Lead: Transformation Officer

SEPARATED

Exploring connections with the outside world needs to happen outside of the core organization. When working together new resources, processes and profit models need to be explored.

Lead: Open Innovation Manager

DISCONNECTED

Hunting for new business is most effective when done disconnected from the core organization. Only key people from the organization should act as investment committee.

Lead: Strategy Officer

*Note: these governance models can differ according to each organization and activity, this is a generalisation based on patterns we noticed within different organizations.
